

November 16, 1990
Public Relations Division
Honda Motor Co., Ltd.

NSX: "BEST OF WHAT'S NEW"

Sold under the name "Acura NSX" in the United States, Honda Motor company's new luxury sports car has received the "Best of What's new" award (automotive category) from America's best-selling scientific magazine Popular Science.

Celebrating its third anniversary this year, "The Best of What's new" rates premium new products and/or technologies in ten different fields. Favorably regarding the Acura NSX as a sports car in an entirely new class, the magazine merits the incorporation of numerous innovative technologies and an all-aluminum body to the automobile's reception of the 1990 automotive category award.

The results of this year's selection are published in the December issue of Popular Science.

* Popular Science *

- First published in May 1872
- Issued monthly
- Circulation 1.8 million